The workshop on water conservation was held at MPH, led by Dr. Elvina Pereira, F.Y.BEd students were present. The session began with a discussion on the importance of water conservation, emphasizing the limited nature of freshwater resources and the impact of water scarcity on communities and ecosystems. Following this, Dr. Elvina Pereira introduced a UNICEF initiative aimed at promoting global water conservation through education and sustainable practices. We were then divided into groups based on our internship schools and assigned various topics related to water conservation, such as awareness among teacher and student, need for water conservation & how plastic is polluting water bodies, amended rules by GOI, what is the global scenario across the globe about water, script for street play and poster making. Each group conducted research and brainstorming sessions, gathering data, reviewing case studies, and identifying innovative solutions. This was indeed a productive activity which enhanced our knowledge of the importance of creating awareness about water conservation.
