It is the form of education that introduces students to beliefs, and perspectives of individual from varied cultural backgrounds. Educators may incorporate multiple perspectives to their lessons to reflect on the diverse culture of the students in their classroom. The goal for multicultural education is to foster educational equity for all the students coming from different backgrounds, cultures and exceptionalities. This is to remove the barriers to achieve educational opportunities and success for all the students. It aims for learning improvement of the students, especially for those who are underrepresented and changing the total school environment.

James Bank introduced five dimensions to the multicultural education, so as to conceptualize it in the classroom. All of the dimensions are distinct in nature, but are interrelated when practiced.

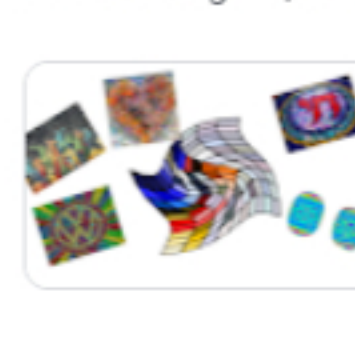

1. Content Integration – It deals with more and more examples, content and perspectives been used from different cultures to illustrate many of the concepts, theories and principles of their discipline.
2. Knowledge Construction – It deals with making students more critical thinkers and readers, by helping them to understand, investigate and determine the assumptions, reference and perspectives of what the students are learning.
3. Equity Pedagogy – Equity can be bought by the teachers by incorporating different teaching styles by using wide range of strategies and techniques of cooperative groups, simulations, role playing and discovery.
4. Prejudice Reduction – Teachers from all disciplines can come together to reduce prejudice in the classroom, as it is prevalent among the students towards other groups.
5. Empowering school culture and social structure – This dimension is restructuring the culture and organization of the entire school so that the students experience equality and equity.

Thus teachers need to self-transform to practice multicultural education.

Mahesh Dattani, the writer and a renowned director of this theatre play didn't just stick to the films, he used his talent in the theatre and here he is with one of the best play of his life. He loves to play with lights and now I know why! A masterpiece which not only focused on the social structure but also brought gender stereotypes still happening around us! The best thing to notice was the change of flow of the act from past to present.

Shantala Sanjay Bhat Bhat Jun 18, 2021

LD, Dyslexia is a problem typically characterised by difficulties in making sense of written alphabets and following a group of written words to create meaning from them. The same information presented orally or in pictorial form has no problems for the child/person to deal with. This is not related to intellectual deficiencies and so can be frustrating for the child/person to deal with as they struggle with only the written format of communication. Sometimes, it could present with other issues such as Autism spectrum and Pervasive Developmental Disorders that affect social skills and therefore require continuous professional help in mastering compensatory skills to substitute the lack of reading and social skills. All three cases showed how the professionals focused on observing and identifying the preferred learning styles and strengths of the child and use them to show the child how to compensate and yet be highly functional in both the classroom as well as with peers. The identical teaching-learning strategies used for the rest of the class cannot be used with them and so the teachers have been co-opted into the new methods so the child can still be included in the class.
